The Society for Spirituality, Theology and Health is a multidisciplinary professional society committed to intellectual engagement, collaboration among members, and support and encouragement for research, education, and practice. The purpose is to stimulate research and education, to connect people with one another, and to help to integrate and interpret the research findings for applications in health care and public health. We invite membership from colleagues from around the world, and current membership includes academic researchers, clinicians, theologians and other clergy, lay persons and interested individuals in the area of religion/spirituality, theology and health. The annual meeting of the Society is designed to bring together transdisciplinary scholars and interested physicians, clergy, chaplains, nurses and lay persons from the United States and other parts of the world to present and discuss the latest research in spirituality, theology, and health.

Speakers

Opening Remarks

Dr. Faye Calhoun, PhD, Interim Director, Biomedical/ Biotechnology Research Institute, North Carolina Central University, has served as the Director of the Office of Collaborative Research and Deputy Director of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism at the NIH and in positions with the FDA and CDC. She collaborated with the Fetzer Institute and developed a research grants program to explore the relationship between spirituality and alcohol use disorders. She continues to work on the development and dissemination of curricula to address substance use disorders for clergy and pastoral care ministers. She received her PhD in Public Administration from the University of Southern California and an MS in endocrinology and biochemistry from Howard University. She received a lifetime achievement award for her work on fetal alcohol syndrome and is the recipient of several NIH Director’s Awards and the Research Society on Alcoholism Sexias Award for Distinguished Service.

Keynote Speaker

Stanley Hauerwas, PhD, Gilbert T. Rowe Professor of Theological Ethics at Duke Divinity School, has sought to recover the significance of the virtues for understanding the nature of the Christian life. This search has led him to emphasize the importance of the church, as well as narrative for understanding Christian existence. His work cuts across disciplinary lines as he is in conversation with systematic theology, philosophical theology and ethics, political theory, as well as the philosophy of social science and medical ethics. He was named “America’s Best Theologian” by Time Magazine in 2001. Dr. Hauerwas, who holds a joint appointment in Duke Law School, delivered the prestigious Gifford Lectureship at the University of St. Andrews, Scotland in 2001.

7th Annual David B. Larson Memorial Lecture

Farr A. Curlin, MD, is a hospice and palliative care physician, researcher, and medical ethicist at the University of Chicago. Dr. Curlin’s empirical research charts the influence of physicians’ religious traditions and commitments (and their secular analogues) on physicians’ clinical practices. His analytical scholarship engages questions regarding whether and in what ways physicians’ religious commitments ought to shape their clinical practices. With respect to the latter, he focuses particularly on the moral dimensions of medical practice, clinical decision-making, and the doctor-patient relationship, as well as on the process of moral formation in medical education. As founding Director of the Program on Medicine and Religion, Dr. Curlin is working with colleagues from the Pritzker School of Medicine and the University of Chicago Divinity School to foster inquiry into and public discourse regarding the intersections of medicine, ethics and the religious traditions.
Plenary Speakers

Wendy Cadge, PhD, is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at Brandeis University and a Susan Young Murray Fellow at the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study at Harvard University during the 2008-09 academic year. She is the author of Heartwood: the First Generation of Theravada Buddhism in America (University of Chicago Press, 2005) and more than 30 articles and book chapters about religion, medicine, immigration, and sexuality in the contemporary United States. She is currently writing a book about religion and spirituality in hospitals to be titled Paging God: Religion in the Halls of Medicine. Portions of this research have been published in Poetics, the Southern Medical Journal, the Journal of Religion, and other publications.

Rabbi Dayle A. Friedman, MSW, MAJCS, BCC, is a pioneer in the development of a Jewish spiritual vision for the second half of life. She is the founder and director of Hiddur: The Center for Aging and Judaism of the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College, which works to foster engaged, spiritually vibrant aging through professional education, scholarship and spiritual resources. Her publications include the recent Jewish Visions for Aging: A Professional Guide for Fostering Wholeness and Jewish Pastoral Care: A Practical Handbook from Traditional and Contemporary Sources, which she edited. Her work was recently acknowledged by her inclusion in the Forward 50, The Forward’s list of influential American Jewish leaders.

Adnan Hammad, PhD, established and directs a comprehensive, holistic, community-based health and research center at the Arab Community Center for Economic and Social Services (ACCESS) in Dearborn, Michigan. The ACCESS Community Health and Research Center has been in operation since 1988 and is a fully integrated community health center comprised of medical, public health, research, mental health, social services and environmental prevention programs. Dr. Hammad’s responsibilities include developing programs designed to promote and improve the health status of the Arab American community. He is very active in academia and is currently a volunteer professor at Wayne State University School of Medicine and consults at the University of Michigan, School of Public Health, and Community-based Public Health agencies.

Christian Smith, PhD, is the William R. Kenan, Jr. Professor of Sociology at the University of Notre Dame, Director of the Center for the Sociology of Religion, and Principal Investigator of the National Study of Youth and Religion. He recently served as Associate Chair of the Department of Sociology at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, from 2000 to 2005. Smith holds an MA (1987) and PhD (1990) in Sociology from Harvard University and has studied Christian historical theology at Harvard Divinity School and other Boston Theological Institute schools. Before moving to UNC Chapel Hill in 1994, Smith taught for six years at Gordon College.
